Definition and Purpose

An in basket exercise, also known as an inbox or inbox simulation, is a structured assessment tool used by fire departments and other emergency services to evaluate a candidate's managerial and decision-making capabilities. During this exercise, candidates are presented with a series of simulated documents, emails, memos, reports, and other correspondence that mimic real-life scenarios they might encounter as fire officers.

The main goal is to assess:

- Prioritization skills: How candidates determine what requires immediate attention versus what can wait.
- Decision-making skills: How they analyze information and choose appropriate actions.
- Time management: How efficiently they allocate their time among multiple tasks.
- Leadership and communication: How they delegate, communicate, and handle conflicting priorities.

- Problem-solving ability: How they handle complex or ambiguous situations.

Typical Format

An in basket exercise usually involves the following elements:

- A set of documents placed in a simulated "in box" or folder.
- A set of instructions or background information provided beforehand.
- A specified time limit (usually 30 minutes to an hour).
- A task list or questions that candidates must complete by the end of the exercise.

Candidates are expected to process the information, make decisions, prioritize tasks, and often prepare a brief report or action plan.
